House of Representatives

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D.D., offered the following prayer:

John 14: 1: Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me.

Almighty God, as we enter upon the business of a new day, inspire us to realize that we are workers with Thee in the building of a better world, each to the extent of his ability and all with equal fidelity.

Grant that in these troubled times we may never surrender to that illogical reasoning and impulsive judgment that Thou art not great enough to prevent such days and not good enough to care.

God forbid that we should ever have any doubt and misgiving as to Thy greatness and goodness or allow our faith in Thy gracious providence to become cold and cynical.

We beseech Thee to purge us of all fear as we encounter stern duties and heavy responsibilities, and may we walk with soul erect, untroubled and unafraid.

In Christ's name we pray. Amen.

JULY 27 (legislative day, JULY 26), 1962.—Ordered to be printed

Mr. HUMPHREY (for Mr. HAYDEN), from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following

REPORT

[To accompany H.J. Res. 839]

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred House Joint Resolution 839, making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1963, and for other purposes, report the same to the Senate without amendment and with the recommendation that the joint resolution be passed.

This joint resolution amends clause (c) of section 102 of the joint resolution of July 1, 1962 (Public Law 87-513), by striking out "July 31, 1962," and inserting in lieu thereof "August 31, 1962". The joint resolution thus makes provision for continuing in operation those functions of the Government for which annual appropriations will not have been signed into law prior to August 1 and is the customary type of resolution making interim provision for the necessary services of Government.

higher learning, 34 percent attended schools below the college level, and 11 percent undertook vocational training. Veterans training under this program had a free choice as to what type of training they would pursue. The World War II and Korean GI bills provided the Nation with 259,000 doctors, nurses, and technicians, 135,000 scientists, 459,000 engineers, and 367,000 school-teachers.

Mr. President, I digress to point out a problem that has been stated to me by college presidents and deans of colleges in speaking about the National Defense Education Act of 1958.

The National Defense Education Act limits loans to students studying engineering, the sciences, foreign languages, mathematics, and certain other selected subjects. Many of the veterans who return from service with the Armed Forces and seek to obtain a national defense education loan are faced with that straitjacket. They must either take one of that small select group of subjects or they cannot obtain a loan.

The GI bill has no such limitation. College deans of admission and college presidents have stated to me that the measure would be an act of justice. Veterans could select the subjects they wanted to take and not be straitjacketed into a type of loan which was created for the sole purpose of helping our defense effort by increasing the number of students taking a certain type of course in college.

The article to which I referred earlier pointed up the employment problems faced by high school graduates and dropouts. The cold war GI bill will enable high school graduates to go on to college or to enter a vocational training program. Even more serious than the problems of the high school graduates, though, are those of the dropouts, who have a 27-percent unemployment rate. Mr. Shiffman states:

School dropouts are apparently unable to overcome many of their disadvantages in the job market and continue to suffer from considerably more unemployment than graduates.

This is shown by the fact that 20 percent of the dropouts are unemployed today.

Many, perhaps most, of these dropouts enter the Armed Forces. This is certainly suggested by the fact that 40 percent of our cold war veterans have not graduated from high school. That is an astounding figure. Is it not clear that since one of our main employment problems is that of high school dropouts, and that since these same people are being discharged from our Armed Forces in such large numbers, that by providing these cold war veterans with educational and vocational training assistance, we will deal a killing blow to the sources of our concern, unemployment and educational failures.

We will solve two of them with one allowance. We will do away with the unemployment benefit to him, because after school he will enter the employed labor force.

Mr. President, instead of merely exploring the situation and undertaking partial measures, let us take decisive action. At this very moment we can enact legislation which will be a measure of justice to that 45 percent of our draft-age youth who serve 2 years or more in the Armed Forces, and who receive no readjustment assistance other than short-term unemployment compensation. This proposal will attack the source of our youth unemployment problem by assisting high school graduates and dropouts in obtaining the educational and training assistance they so vitally need. It will allow the individual the freedom of choosing the kind of education or training that will best satisfy his desires and needs. And it will accomplish these things in the most efficient and economical possible manner, since the proposed program would have the benefit of the considerable administrative experience gained from the two previous GI bills. Mr. President, the 36 other cosponsors—and I—of this bill sincerely hope that the Senate will take action on it. It is so obviously justified on so many grounds, that I do not see how this body can do otherwise.

THE OPPOSITION IS ANSWERED

Mr. President, voices have naturally been raised in objection to the cold war GI bill. I would like at this point to answer the objections which have been made. One of these is that today the draft does not have so great an impact upon disruption of education and career plans as it does in wartime.

I certainly agree that the present draft does not cause hardships as great as those of wartime. This is reflected in the reduced benefits of the cold war GI bill, which are designed to provide for the less extensive nature of the disruptions caused by cold war service. Certainly, though, those who suffer disruptions at this crucial time of their lives fall behind those of their contemporaries who for one reason or another are not asked to serve.

The large group of young people who either cannot afford or do not choose to go to college have two choices:

First. If they enlist immediately after high school, they will, upon discharge, probably have a difficult time finding a job, or at best, find only a very low paying job. In 1955, 50 percent of those discharged either had no previous civilian occupation at all or else had worked only as unskilled labor. The percentage is even higher today.

Second. If they choose to go to work upon graduation from high school, they will find it difficult to secure a job that offers future advancement, since their military obligation still lies before them.

We talk about these young people looking for jobs. When they go out looking for jobs they are asked by their employer, "Have you done your military duty?" They have trouble getting a job if they have not performed their military duty, unless they are married. We know that sociologists deplore teenage marriages. Sometimes young people are forced to marry under these circumstances. They marry as teenagers. Some of them marry for the purpose of escaping the draft. Whatever work they do find will be interrupted in a few years when they are required to meet their military obligation.

Mr. President, having reached the time at which this session is supposed to come to an end tonight, I ask unanimous consent that I may continue my speech on Monday next, and that it shall be counted as one speech against me. This has been discussed earlier tonight; at least I requested that it be discussed with the distinguished majority whip.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I would be forced to object. I do not know that there is any agreement as to the time when the Senate was supposed to bring the session tonight to an end. I understood the able Senator from Texas to say that he was anxious to edify and inform Members of the Senate as to what is wrong with the bill. So far as I have been able to learn, he has talked about a bill which is totally unrelated to the bill we are discussing.

Thus far we have made no great progress. I am still waiting to hear what the Senator has to say with respect to this particular bill which has already passed the House of Representatives, which has been approved by the Commerce Committee, which has been approved by the Space Committee, which has been approved by the policy committee, and which, if it were permitted to come to a vote on the floor of the Senate, would get more than 80 votes.

Therefore, rather than to agree to any unanimous-consent request, I suggest, if the Senator has something to say, that he proceed to do so with respect to this bill. I certainly cannot agree at this particular moment to any kind of unanimous-consent request such as has been suggested by him.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. I am certain that if the distinguished Senator from Florida does not think I have said anything up to this point, I could talk for months and he would still have the same opinion.

Mr. SMATHERS. I believe the Senator has made a wonderful speech with respect to the GI bill. It seems to me, however, that what he has said is unrelated to the question of the satellite communication bill. I may be wrong, but I do not quite get the connection. In any event, I would say to the able Senator that he has made a splendid speech, and I have been greatly persuaded by what he has said about the GI bill. If he were to get to the subject of the satellite communication bill, he would probably be equally persuasive.
